

INTRODUCING C. P. STREETER, GAZETTE'S NEW FARM EDITOR

With this issue of The Evening Gazette's farm page, C. P. Streeter, becomes farm editor of the paper, succeeding Vance W. McCray.

The Evening Gazette feels that Mr. Streeter is exceptionally well qualified to serve the farm readers of The Gazette, for he brings to his work the rare combination of experience both as a farmer and as a newspaper man. His home is on a farm near Groton, S. D., where he was associated with his father in management of their farm. Mr. Streeter and his father recently sold a herd of 200 registered Herefords and he still owns a number of dairy cows and a herd of pure bred Duroc Jersey hogs.

Mr. Streeter, growing up on a farm, decided to take advantage of the opportunities offered at Iowa State college at Ames. He was graduated there at the mid-winter commencement this year, in animal husbandry and economic science (marketing) courses. He was a member of the college livestock judging team last fall that went to the Kansas City Royal show and the International show at Chicago.

Becoming interested in newspaper work, particularly as it applied to farmers and farm interests, Mr. Streeter seized another opportunity there and became one of the most active students in agricultural journalism of the college. His ability in writing and handling news was quickly recognized and he ultimately was made editor of the Iowa State Student, the campus newspaper at

—Photo by Kadgihn.

C. P. STREETER.

Ames, one of the highest honors to be accorded in college journalism.

